Neighborhood Advice

Freely Given by a Norway Citizen.

When one has suffered tortures from a bad back and found relief from the aches and pains, that person's advice is of untold value to friends and neighbors. The following neighborhood advice comes from a Norway resident.

M. W. Sampson, Prop. boat transportation business, 19 Bridge St., Norway, says: "A cold settled on my kidneys and brought on attacks of backache. I was lame and unable to move any way, the pain in my back was so severe. My kidneys didn't act right and I had dizzy spells. A friend who had used Doan's Kidney Pills with good results, advised me to try them, so I went to Stone's Drug Store and got three boxes. After I had finished taking them, the trouble left and I have been free from kidney disorder since."

Price 60c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Sampson had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

NEW DORMITORY FOR THE BLIND

The Maine Institution for the Blind, with headquarters at 97 Exchange street, Portland, has a plan to expand and meet the opportunities, at present beyond its resources. A new dormitory for men is needed badly and a punch is behind the movement to secure a modern, fire proof structure properly arranged for their needs.

While the property today covers five acres and more, with workshops, dormitories for men and women, a dwelling for the superintendent and his family, there yet remains a long felt want.

The present dormitory for men is wooden construction with two stories and finished attic. It is unsuited in design and arrangement of rooms. Its heating and sanitary arrangements are inadequate and useful only for a private house for which purpose they once served. There are no fire escapes, so little wonder the inmates appear so helpless in the night when the city fire department is called to subdue a blaze in that section.

So far as possible public subscription and bequests will be relied upon to finance the new building. The appeal is broadcasted by circular letters, and leading newspapers in Maine are devoting space to get it before the people.

Few stop to think of the unfortunate blind. Close your eyes for a moment and try and picture what you would do if you could never open them again.

These men and women are just like the rest of us mortals except that they cannot see. Some have always been blind, others have been blind for years, a few have become blind through sickness of accident after enjoying years of normal sight.

Do you wonder that to many blind life seems a dreary, hopeless proposition? Do you wonder that the natural tendency of a blind person might be toward discouragement, moroseness? Is it strange that they sometimes feel themselves a care and a burden to friends or relatives.

Grasping our viewpoint it should be easy to understand then what this wonderful institution means to blind people, particularly those without means. It gives them the knowledge that they can create worth while things. They can with their sensitive fingers turn out in quantities sufficient to bring them a living wage useful articles for which there is a constant demand. Shouldn't the State be liberal in its appropriations for such an institution as this? Shouldn't individuals be as generous as their means will permit? It would surely seem so.

Other Big Advantages

By using the Willard battery, you will not only get rid of battery noises, but you will also gain in several other important ways. These gains can all be summed up under two heads: Increased efficiency of operation and greater economy, but they touch a number of different points.

You know, that for your set to deliver the best results, your B batteries should work at a certain voltage. If the voltage drops, the volume of sound coming through your phones is reduced, and signals that you would get with the correct voltage in the batteries may either not be heard at all, or may be so faint as to be of no practical value. Constant voltage, or as near it as possible, is what you want in your batteries, and it is something you can get only with properly constructed storage batteries.

In a dry battery, the voltage begins to drop with the production of the battery. By the time it reaches the user, which may be some months after its manufacture, there has been a certain amount of loss, and this loss goes on continually after the battery is put into service, making it impossible to maintain constant voltage.

NORWAY AND VICINITYFrank McCarthy Amid Florida Sunshine

Another letter from "Showman Mac" to the Advertiser with one "long green" for a subscription, contains the good news he is gaining under the influence of Florida sunshine and beautiful surroundings.

Mac can't forget Norway. He says, "The best way for me to get the home news is to take the Advertiser for it looks mighty good now." Several friends in Norway have written and their letters are eagerly read, but the paper fits in with a large variety of items covering a wide field.

A. R. Clark of St. Petersburg, who summers in Bolster's Mills, hunted up Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy receiving the tip from the letter published in this paper a few weeks ago. Frank was pleased to see him as a school boy to find the teacher ill with mumps. They had a glorious time reviewing events and persons in the old home town.

According to the letter the beautiful warm weather during the day is varied with cool nights, but not so uncomfortable as to drive them from the sleeping porch. The evening newspaper is given away free every day the same day to some in that city. Mac says "The record is sixty free issues in eleven years." Our Maine establishments would go broke on that offer.

Above all things, Mac regrets his inability to write and talk and threatens to make up for lost time when he is in. He soliloquizes as follows, "Good Lord, never thought an Irishman could live so long without talking."

Breezy letters or a call from Norway friends will be appreciated for the McCarthy's far from home and every little bit of news or gossip is cheerful medicine. They are located at 1025 So. Fourth Street, St. Petersburg, Fla.

FAKE LABELS ON MILK BOTTLES

The attention of the Dairy Division of the Maine Department of Agriculture has been called to alleged misbranding of milk by certain milk dealers. The alleged misbranding is found on the caps of the bottles in which milk is sold. These caps are marked with the statements of "Certified Milk" and "Pasteurized Milk." Such statements are forbidden by law unless the product labeled is produced and handled according to the process designated.

No "Certified Milk" is produced or sold in the state of Maine. Certified milk must be produced and handled according to the rules of a "Certified Milk Commission." There is no "Certified Milk Commission" in this State. Such milk is obtained at an unusually high cost and is sold for about twenty-five or thirty cents a quart.

Labels of "Pasteurized Milk" can be lawfully used only to designate milk that has been heated to 142 degrees F or over, held for at least thirty minutes and then immediately cooled to 50 degrees F or under. "Pasteurized Milk" is being sold in only a few of the larger cities of Maine. "Pasteurized Milk" is considered no better than ordinary milk from a healthy herd free from disease. The advantage pasteurized milk has over ordinary (raw) milk is that the process of pasteurization, to which the former is subjected, will kill germs that might be therein and transmit a communicable disease. Ordinary milk is more valuable, as a food, since its vitamin content is not impaired as is done by pasteurization. The greatest advantage which dealers might obtain in the use of the label "Pasteurized Milk" lies in misleading an uninformed public into the belief that the term "pasteurized" refers to a better product.

The cases of misbranding are believed to be unintentional and are probably due to the fact that certain supply houses are selling lots of assorted caps with various labels marked "Certified Milk" and "Pasteurized Milk" which when used on ordinary (raw) milk, are false and malicious. Dealers using such are subject to a heavy penalty for misbranding. Milkmen are warned against the use of these caps.

A COMMENDABLE OCCUPATION

It has never been an easy matter to get really competent school teachers. Plenty of young women and some men have usually been available for the job. But it is a line of work calling for both special gifts and special preparation. The number who have both sets of qualifications is not abundant.

The conditions arising out of the war led many girls who previously would have sought to become school teachers to enter the business world. The time required for preparation is not so long for ordinary business positions. There was a time for a year or two when teachers' salaries had not been advanced much, when many schools were without teachers, and many had to employ persons who had very little preparation.

Since that period, teachers' salaries have been advanced substantially and the calling is more attractive financially than it was. But complaint is still by many school authorities, that a large part of the brainy girls they desire are still going into business.

The difficulty is made more pronounced by the fact that these young teachers get married so rapidly. After superintendents have chased all over the section to find competent young women for this work, it is rather disappointing to have them get married after just a few years of service. Still matrimony is woman's chief calling in life. One should rather be glad that men show the sense to prefer these well educated girls who must be specially competent to raise up families to be good citizens.

Girls who are considering the choice of occupations should realize that there are many attractions in school teaching. Teachers have to work harder than many people suppose. Yet their long vacations, and the broad culture that comes, are advantages that tend to a happy and rewarding career.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

New Roadster

Business men—with whom the runabout has always been very popular—are well pleased with the changes embodied in this model.

Always rugged, the car has been made decidedly trimmer and more comfortable.

This result is obtained by raising the radiator and enlarging the cowl, making a decided improvement in looks and providing more leg room.

A well designed top and slanting windshield do their share toward adding a finished, clean-cut appearance.

Make it a point to see the other new models also on display in our show room.

INDIAN SUMMER DISCUSSED

The Rambler in the Transcript-Journal of Franklin Falls, N. H., of recent date has this to say:

"We must have some more pleasant days, the Indian summer has not come yet, when a young person, hearing it said, 'Indian Summer, what is that?'"

"Indian Summer is a spell of warm weather, which generally comes in November. Occasionally it comes in October, and more rarely in December. When it comes in November we usually have from seven to fourteen days of it, and it is at this time that the Indians were said to 'jerk their venison,'" was the reply.

"What is it to 'jerk venison'?" was the next question.

"The story is that in the warm days, usually following soon after the Hunters' moon, the Indians cut the deer meat into thin strips and hung the meat on sticks and poles to dry. In this way they could keep it for eating late when game was scarce."

"Why don't you tell about this in the Rambler column?" was the next question.

"Why, it is an old story, and probably most people know it better than I do," said the Rambler.

"Well, I am one who did not know it," was the reply.

And so the story is here told. But to refresh his memory the Rambler sought information from the encyclopedia.

In the New International, he found a good story about Indian Summer, but nothing about the jerked venison. Possibly, yes, probably, the latter is of American origin only. But the Indian Summer is world wide, although it goes under different names in other countries. England has borrowed the name from America, it, having been introduced there in 1778. In Germany it is known as "Old Woman's Summer." The former name in England was "St. Martin's Summer" or "All Hallow Summer." But everyone can get all of this and more from an encyclopedia.

"The Indian summer period is near at hand. There is considerable misconception as to what this warm season of the year really is, whether it covers a definite period and is a real season, or is only sort of a chance spell of warm weather. The Weather Bureau gives us some interesting information on this subject. It tells us that the popular belief that 'Indian Summer' is a period occurring more or less regularly every autumn is not based on accurate meteorological observations. 'Indian summer' is the name commonly applied in this country to a period of mild fall weather following a spell of unseasonably cold weather known as 'squat winter.' As a matter of fact, Indian summer is not a definitely fixed season in the calendar but varies in date and duration. In many years it is intermittent; that is, there may be several Indian summers in one autumn. Indian summer is not, strictly speaking, a season at all, but merely a type of mild, calm, hazy weather likely to prevail at any time in the autumn or early winter. Thoreau, in notes on weather conditions at Concord, Mass., from 1851 to 1860, records the occurrence of Indian summer weather on dates ranging from September 27 to December 13. Let us hope that we will have several Indian summers this year."

RADIO RECEIVING SETS

By Harry E. Dart, B. E.

Article 3. Audio-Frequency Amplification
A single detector tube will seldom give an output signal strong enough to operate a loud speaker. When a strong signal is desired, it is necessary to use tubes connected as amplifiers. While it is mainly a matter of proper connections, there are many refinements and precautions which will assist in securing clear signals and the maximum amount of amplification without distortion. As these amplifiers are for the amplification of signals which have been rectified, and amplifier is known as the audio-frequency type.

Instead of the usual telephone receivers, a telephone jack is connected in the plate circuit of the detector tube c. By plugging a telephone plug in the jack in this socket it is an easy matter to make the usual connection to the telephone receivers if such is desired. When there is no plug in the telephone jack the plate circuit is closed through the primary winding of the transformer e. By transformer action the energy is transferred to the secondary winding of this same transformer and impressed on the grid circuit of the first amplifier tube f. After being amplified in tube f the energy is passed through another transformer g and into the secondary amplifier tube h. The signal is then sent through the loud speaker l to produce audible sounds.

If the detector tube does not produce sufficient regeneration to oscillate when the amplifier part is used, but does when telephone receivers are used, it is possible that the capacity of the shunt condenser j is too small. It should have a capacity of about .01 microfarad, and may be connected across the jack only, as shown, or so as to include the detector B. battery.

The amplifier tubes f and h may be any of the standard hard commercial tubes. It is satisfactory to operate all of the tubes from one common A. battery as indicated at k. Although one common filament control switch will work quite well when the tubes are similar, it is better practice to have a separate rheostat on each tube. It is especially desirable that there be a separate rheostat for the detector tube as its filament-current adjustment is often quite critical in the control of regeneration and operation in general.

The positive A. battery lead is connected to the negative lead of the B. battery l. This section of B. battery should be about 45 volts for a hard detector tube, and will be common to the plate circuits of all the tubes. The plate voltage of the amplifier tubes should be somewhat higher so as to give a total plate potential of about 60 to 90 volts on the amplifier tubes. An extra battery at m gives this higher voltage.

When a high plate voltage is used on amplifier tubes, it is desirable to use a C. battery to give a negative grid bias. With a proper value of grid bias recommended by the manufacturers of the tubes, operation will be such as to give undistorted amplification, and will be performed with a low value of plate current. The use of such bias is shown at n and o with separate C. batteries for each tube, although one common C. battery will work just as well. A bias, or C. battery is always connected so as to make the grid negative, which would be as indicated in the figure. As there is practically no current taken from the C. battery, a few small flashlight cells will serve very well. Even if no separate C. battery is used, there is a considerable bias secured by the voltage drop in the filament rheostat. With a plate potential of 45 volts the rheostat bias will be ample, but with 90 volts on the plate a 3- to 4-1.1-volt battery is desirable.

The operation of an amplifier often may be greatly improved by inserting a fairly high resistance or a small condenser across the secondary of the first transformer. The switch arm p is connected to one end of the secondary of transformer e, and may make contact with the resistance q, condenser r, or the open position at s. The main noticeable effect of the resistance unit is to produce very quiet operation of the set with but a slight reduction in the signal strength. The resistance may be anywhere from 10,000 to 100,000 ohms, and its value will depend somewhat on the set and the tube in use. If desired, another contact point may be added so that the effect of another resistance unit may be more readily compared. Low resistance grid-leak units are very convenient for this purpose.

The condenser r may be of the fixed mica type and in most cases a capacity of .0005 microfarad will be found about right. Such a condenser will often reduce the tendency for the amplifier to howl. The open circuit contact point at s is desirable so that by switching to this position one can quickly obtain a comparison as to the effectiveness of the resistance or condenser in improving the signal quality.

Another method which is often helpful in securing quiet operation of an amplifier set is to connect a condenser between the grid of the last amplifier tube and the ground or plate circuit. The condenser t may be a small fixed mica condenser with a capacity of .001 or .002 microfarads. Sometimes a 48-plate variable condenser in this position will show that its adjustments help clarify the signal. The condenser connects with a switch arm which can make contact with the ground lead at u, the plate circuit at v, or the open-circuit position w. It is impossible to predict which position will give the best quality of signal, so the switch arm should be tried on various positions until the best one is found.

BATES—WEST PARIS

Lewis M. Mann
Lewis M. Mann, who for the past fifty-three years had been engaged in the manufacture of clothes pins and pail handles, passed away at his home on Main Street, West Paris, Me., on Wednesday, Oct. 24, at the age of 74 years. Mr. Mann had been in feeble health and blind for some time, but was always cheerful and ever had the best interests of the business at heart.

Mr. Mann was born in Jeffrey, N. H., Dec. 6, 1848 and was the son of Edwin and Caroline (Sibley) Mann. He was twice married, first to Mary A. Towne of Norway, who died in 1893 and to whom two sons were born: Arthur L., who died in 1904 at the age of 27 years, and Edwin J., who survives him. He is also survived by his widow, Mabel A. Mann two sisters, and three grandchildren.

Early in boyhood he was employed turning pails in Troy, N. H., and in 1870 moved to Norway, where he started the manufacture of clothes pins and pail handles. Two years later he moved to Snow's Falls and shortly after that to West Paris where he remained until 1880 at which time he and his brother the late Walter E. Mann, went into business at Milton Plantation under the firm name of L. M. & W. E. Mann. In 1893 the business having outgrown the capacity of their plant, he again moved to West Paris where he purchased a factory on the site where the present factory now stands. Two years later, owing to the death of his brother, he began operating both factories and later on purchased a factory at Bryant Pond, operating three factories until the destruction of the Bryant Pond plant by fire in 1906.

In 1905 Mr. Mann formed a partnership with his son Edwin J. and since that time the business has been conducted under the firm name of Lewis M. Mann & Son.

Although suffering the loss of five factories by fire without insurance, Mr. Mann has each time faced the situation and built better than before. A brick factory to replace the one destroyed at Bryant Pond was nearly completed at the time of his death and will double the output of the firm.

Funeral services were conducted from his late residence, Rev. E. B. Forbes officiating. West Paris Lodge of Odd Fellows performed the burial service and Onward Rebekah Lodge attended in a body. Interment was in Norway Pine Grove Cemetery.

FALLACY OF BUYING BY MAIL

How would you like to journey to the nearest city for a pound of sugar, or a yard of muslin, or a spool of thread, or a smoke? And how would you like to make the trip when you need a prescription filled in a hurry, with death running you a race?

You would make some noise if forced to such an extremity—and then more noise.

You would say—and justly so—that a town in which you cannot buy a pound of sugar, or a yard of muslin, or a spool of thread, or a smoke or even get a prescription filled, is a mighty poor excuse for a town and not worth living in.

Yet our merchants can only afford to keep these things for your convenience as long as you buy other things from them.

It is not doing this town any good to buy the little things here and then chase off to a city or send to a catalogue house when you want something on which the merchant has a chance to make a dollar.

Neither is it doing you any good, for the prosperity of each citizen, is dependent, to a large extent, upon the prosperity of the community as a whole.

We are not telling you something you do not know.

We are simply refreshing your memory in hopes the time may come when our people will conclude that a town that is worth living in is worth trading in.

That's all.

SWEDEN

Black Mt. Mysterious Fire

The hill was put into a state of excitement, late Friday afternoon by the sudden bursting into flames of the all Noah Smart buildings. These buildings have not been occupied for the past few years, but the barn and shed were used to store various farming tools by the neighbors.

When the barn suddenly and very mysteriously burst into flames, neighbors rushed to the scene, hoping to save something, but before those who lived nearest could get there all that was left of the barn was burning framework, and the shed and house were already in flames.

Beside the layout of the buildings which belonged to N. P. Fox of Portland, Guy Tower lost all of his farming tools, which were housed there, and three loads of hay.

Will Bryan lost a wagon, and Del Stearns of Lovell lost a load of hay and Clayton Tower a cart body.

The cause of the fire is unknown, though various stories are afloat. However, it looks as though this would have to go on record as a "mystery."

Mrs. Clara Libby and young son who have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Briggs have returned to their home in North Conway, N. H.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Dixon who have been visiting at Guy Tower's have returned to their home in Portsmouth, N. H.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Tower, Florence Gregory and Richard Berry motored to Portland one day this week.

Clayton Tower is putting running water into his buildings.

EAST SUMNER

Mrs. Doble of Saco inspected the W. R. C. at this place Wednesday of last week and expressed herself as well pleased with the work done. The W. R. C. is a fine order organized for a noble purpose, and has among its members some of our best ladies. Mrs. Stella Cobb has recently been appointed inspector.

Richard Palmer recently injured his wrist and medical examination proved that one of the bones was cracked.

Mrs. Geo. Barrows and Mary Alley went to Winthrop, Sunday to attend the funeral of their brother, Melville Alley, who died a few hours after an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Alley was a native of Hartford.

Howard Parlin, who is working in Portland, spent the week end at his home on Sumner Hill.

Rev. and Mrs. Houghton and W. H. Eastman attended the meeting at Dixfield in the interest of the every member drive.

CONSIDER THE ADVANTAGES OF FARM LIFE

In this age of howling and growling over the farmer's poor financial show it is well to take account of some of the special and enjoyed advantages of farm life. Farming is conceded by medical authorities to be one of the most healthful of occupations.

Physicians recommend it especially for persons troubled with weak lungs and inherited tendencies to tuberculosis. When I was a young man, and teaching school, I had a bad throat trouble. A prominent physician advised me that if I wanted to live long I must go on the farm.

A long list of my relatives had died of consumption, and so against my natural bent and intention I followed his advice and have lived to the present time on a farm.

When young the hardest kind of farm work was done by hand instead of machinery. Mowing, raking and pitching all the time. Rushing and perspiring with cows to milk before beginning the real day work in the morning and after closing the same at night—doing more strenuous work in one day than is now done in a week.

I have had family sickness and losses and, my share of difficulties to overcome, but am still in the cut on the verge of four score years as sound as a nut physically so far as I know—have raised five respectable children to manhood and womanhood—suffered the loss of one in the late war—owe no one anything but good will and cherish the desire to see universal prosperity, peace and happiness.

Farm work involves manifold activities that bring into play all the muscles of the body, and the farmer ought to be with a sensible use—not abuse—of himself a nearly perfect physical type of man. He isn't cramped up in an office or factory with little use for only a part of himself day in and day out with eyes and hands seeing and doing one thing.

He has plenty of good air and water and can have fresh vegetables of all kinds that can be raised on his soil and in his climate if he so desires, plans and works for them. Good health cannot be measured by dollars and cents. It is the preessential to the greatest attainments and happiness in life. The millionaire without health is poorer than the poorest with health.

The farmer has plenty of room to move around in without treading on somebody's toes. He is not obliged to move through a crowd or wait several minutes to cross a street when going to his place of business, to church or clubs or places of amusements and if he has a silver he can extend his market and so decide privileges indefinitely.

If he is smart and turns his work off in order he can find leisure for fishing and hunting without loss of valuable time. He is the freest and most independent of all men in the laboring class—He is king on his estate and prescribes his own rules of administration and if he be a one-man farmer has no one to violate them and find fault with but himself, and his success will depend largely on his efficiency as a worker and manager.

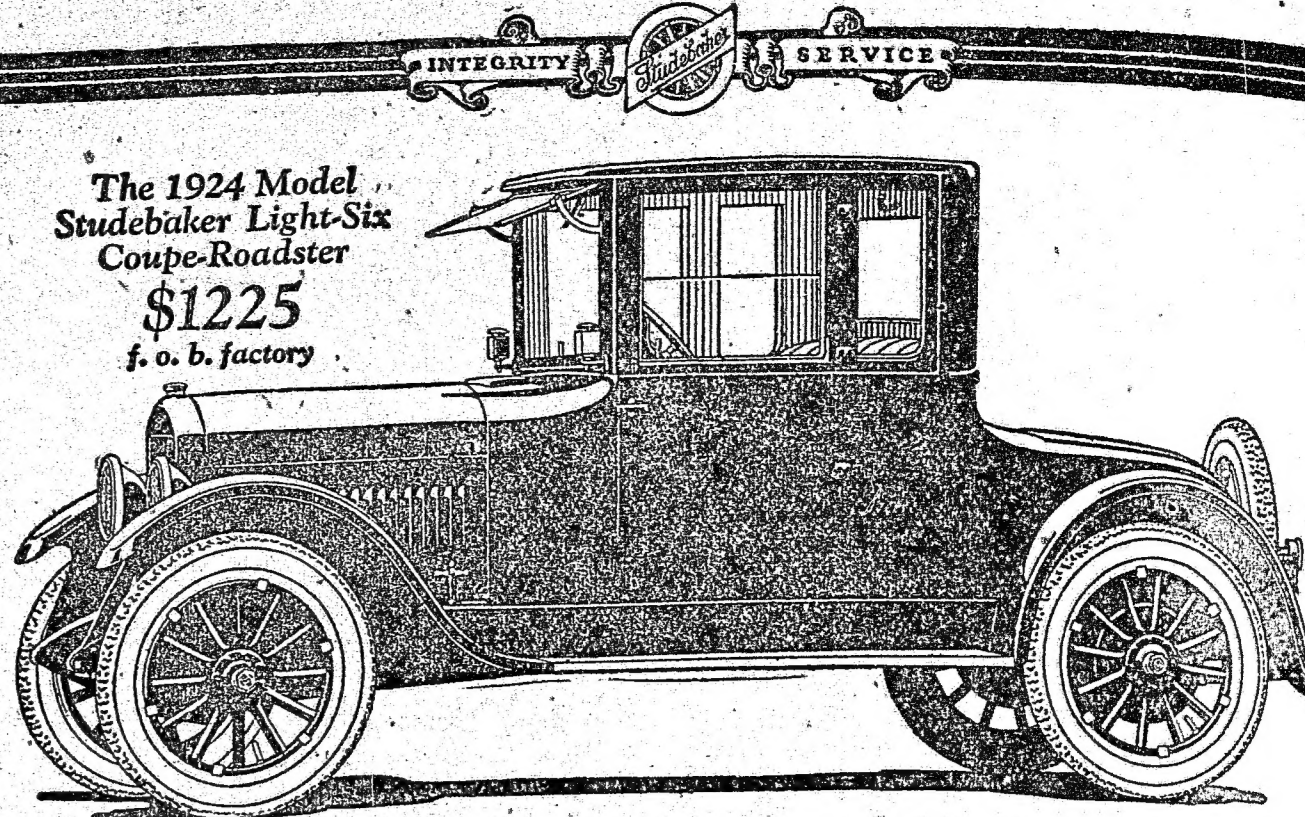

In the country there is no caste, no autocracy; all stand on a level society as a unit. They are not troubled with strikes or mobs or daily excitements as in the large cities.

They need not be worried on account of fuel shortage or high and everchanging prices. The farmer is more in his family than the city laborer, and has fewer temptations to break up home life. He is not subject to that contagious excitement which often moves great masses in the city with a frenzy often hard to control.

He is in God's great laboratory and can study the processes of the present, nature, of growth development, the unity, order and adoption of the material universe for definite purposes.

He can vary and diversify his crops to offset overproduction in any particular line, use business sense in production, and still be marketing, need a bill on a cash basis, unless extend his business on a safe credit of foundation.

ENTERTAINING ANGELS

By Mrs. H. E. Charles

Mrs. Pillsbury, the good Deacon's wife, arose and went about her work with a feeling of bitter disappointment for she and Elvira Sampson, the village dressmaker, had planned a trip to the beach on Saturday for Elvira was a hard-working girl, who never had more than a week in a whole year that she could call her own, and Mrs. Pillsbury lived a little way from the village on a small farm, where life was one unending round of drudgery. They had looked forward for months to this release from work, and now their plans were frustrated, for Elvira would not go without Mrs. Pillsbury, and Mrs. Pillsbury could not go, because so many people belonging to her church had gone away for an outing, and there was no one left who could take care of the minister who was coming to preach as a candidate. It was the only Sunday that he could be released from his own service, and though the congregation would be small, the committee on supply had voted to hear him on this particular Sunday. The deacons would not hear his going to the hotel—it would not seem hospitable, and then there was the expense.

"Well," said Elvira, "of course I'm disappointed, but possibly we may be able to get away later, and besides it is the Mr. Fleet I heard at Harpswell last year, I'd like to hear him again."

"Deacon Varnum said he might possibly get here tonight, so to look round Saturday," said Deacon Pillsbury.

"I hope he won't, for I want to go down to the pasture after supper, and pick a few blueticks. They're masterly, thick, and I want to make pies tomorrow," said his wife.

"You feed people to well," said Elvira. "Good-bye; I hope you'll be able to come to church Sunday."

After Mrs. Pillsbury had finished her work on Friday afternoon, she decided to go to the pasture quite a little distance from the house, to get the berries for the following day.

"Haven't you better take the dog with you," asked Mr. Pillsbury, as she started down the lane. "There's a lot of tramps round now-a-days."

"Oh no," she said, "they won't get so far out of the street as that."

She found the berries very plentiful and soon her basket was well filled. As she stepped over the pasture bars on her way to the lane, which led to her house, she saw a strange looking man approaching. She gazed at him. He was unshaven and covered with dust, his hat looked jammed and altogether he had a most unkempt appearance. He must be a tramp of the vicious kind, she thought, and I'm afraid I'll hurry home, for if Tige should get hold of him there wouldn't be much left of him.

He drew near and very politely asked her if he was on the right road to Deacon Pillsbury's house, if not would she direct him. She said at once, "Deacon Pillsbury's folks don't keep a tavern, so as you are so near one where they would be glad to see you, you better keep right on over there."

"But," the man said, "I have walked a long way."

"Oh yes," said Mrs. Pillsbury, "such as you are always walking. You go right along and you'll soon find a place." She hurried past him and left him standing in a very uncertain attitude. She reached her door breathless and decidedly scared.

"Why mother," exclaimed the Deacon, "what's happened to you? You look real frustrated."

She gasped, "The tramp! Where's Tige?"

"No tramp here," said the Deacon, "but I'm starved, do let's eat supper, guess the minister won't get here before tomorrow anyway."

"I hope not," she replied. "They were not disturbed during the night and evidently the tramp had found a night's lodging elsewhere."

Saturday morning dawned bright and beautiful, and Mrs. Pillsbury sighed as she thought of her intended trip to the beach, but she bravely turned her attention to the extra supply of food she was preparing, for she told her husband: "Ministers, of all folks in the world, like good vittles."

By three o'clock the worthy couple were ready to receive their guest, having stowed themselves in their best in honor of the occasion. The parlor, where they sat with folded hands, was deliciously cool, but the deacon was uneasy. He said "it seemed so shiftless to be settin' round that way, as if it was Sunday," and he was glad when the doorbell rang, and Mrs. Pillsbury ushered in the minister.

"This is Mr. Fleet, the minister, Deacon. Now make yourself right at home or wouldn't you like to go to your room and get off a little dust. The Deacon will show you right up, and I'll go and get an early tea. Cause maybe some of the other committee'll call by and by and see ye."

And she rattled on without giving the minister a chance to put in a word.

When the Deacon returned to the kitchen where he was busy preparing supper, he said: "He ain't much of a talker, that's a fact, and his clothes smelt awfully of smoke."

"Oh, you're always smellin' tobacco, He's probably rode in the cars where other folks were smokin'."

"I don't like his hair cropped so close," said the Deacon.

"You'd find fault with the angel Gabriel, I guess. Oh, I hear him coming."

He had changed his apparel, and now wore a handsome suit of black and seemed to enjoy the good things with which the table was loaded, as much as the hosts could have desired. But all attempts at conversation were in vain, and they were forced to conclude that he was very tired, and probably was thinking deeply of his pupil efforts of the morning.

As soon as supper was over he said that he would go for a short walk and smoke.

"Smoke," said Deacon Pillsbury, horrified; "you're the first minister I ever knew that used tobacco."

"I assure you they are very common," answered the minister, "only most of them do it on the sly—and he walked down the lane and disappeared around the corner."

"Wal, mother that settles it. Why I don't believe they'd hire him, if he was the biggest preacher in the world, if he smokes."

The evening wore away, and no one called but Elvira, who was going by. She had been to the store for some bread and she called to say that Mr. Barnes, the storekeeper, asked her why the minister didn't go to Deacon Pillsbury's.

He said he went to the tavern for Jim Sanders saw him there."

"O what gossips those people are," answered Mrs. Pillsbury. "He's here, only he's gone out for a walk. Mr. Pillsbury has just gone down the street a piece to meet him."

"Well, it's kind of funny; they thought 'twas him anyway. But I shall be afraid to go home, it's so dark, if I don't run along."

When the Deacon came in without the minister she told him what Elvira said.

"I was goin' to ask him to lead in prayer tonight, but he's probably gone up to the village. So we'll get ready and go to bed."

But it seemed a long time before they heard him ascend the stairs to his room.

When they awoke Sunday morning, Mrs. Pillsbury asked her husband if he had locked the stable the night before.

"Yes," he said, for he didn't know but the tramp might get round and set them afire."

"Well, Tige barked awfully, and I thought I heard somebody round."

About seven o'clock Mr. Pillsbury was sent to call Mr. Fleet to breakfast, but soon returned, saying: "I couldn't raise him; I pounded on the door and called him, but he must be an awful sound sleeper—They ain't no lock on the door, but I hated to open it."

"Well, I'll go up with you—He may be sick or somethin'."

"Mr. Fleet," she called, "hadn't you just as soon get up now? Breakfast is all ready," then, "father you open that door," she said, "something must be the matter." He opened the door but found no occupant. "For mercy's sake his grip sack has gone, what does it mean?" But Mrs. Pillsbury did not reply—she was reading a letter which lay upon the stand near the bed. It read like this:

"Dear good people:—When you read this I shall be many miles away from here. You took me in cordially, and I took you in but not in the same way. I came to ask for a little food and you gave me most welcome hospitality which I shall not soon forget. I am a tramp though not of a dangerous order. I only wanted a little assistance to get out of the state, as I am an escaped convict. I borrowed my excellent wearing apparel a hundred miles from your house, and a little money. I was compelled to have a little more, so as your basket, I have abstracted its contents, which I shall return with interest, when I find employment." (The wretch, my beach money, twelve dollars and over.)

"—Well, go on Malviny," calmly replied Mr. Pillsbury.—"I felt a little guilty, I confess, when you were so kind to ask me, and I am sorry that I am not able to fill your pulpit tomorrow. I wanted to borrow your gray mare, which you are so proud of—but you dog compelled me to forego that privilege. Friends, I mean to lead a better life if I get to a place where I can begin anew. I had a good mother. She is in her grave, her death hastened by the fact that I was in prison as a forger."

Yours truly, The tramp.

"Well, well, well," was all that Pillsbury could say.

"It's strange, Deacon, you couldn't have seen through him. You ain't fit to be a Deacon, you're so apt to be gulled by folks."

"I wonder who said, 'I would find fault with an angel' when I said I didn't like some things about him."

"Well, I hate to go to meetin' and see the folks," said Mrs. Pillsbury.

"I don't," he said, "any thing we could help, though I didn't feel right about him from the first. He didn't act to me as if he knew what he was about. All we can say is, that we were mistaken, which is the truth."

"But he left my money, though if 'll help him to lead a better life I don't know as I ought to care."

When they arrived at the church door Elvira was the first to greet them.

"Mr. Fleet did go to the tavern as they told me. Now who in the world palmed that off on you?"

"O, that's a good joke. I'll tell you all about it sometime," answered Mr. Pillsbury. "It's time we were taking our seats."

But Elvira remarked to a friend that stood near, that "the Deacon and his wife seemed kind o' frustrated."

Mrs. Pillsbury turned pale and looked ready to faint, when the minister arose for the invocation, for she recognized the man she had met on Friday at the pasture bars.

"What's the matter, mother," whispered the Deacon. "I'll tell you by and by," she answered and sat down.

"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

Deacon Varnum hastened to them at the close of the service to inquire, why Mr. Fleet didn't stay with them over the Sabbath.

"There was a mistake somewhere," quietly remarked Deacon Pillsbury.

"I asked the minister, and he said there was a little misunderstanding," said Deacon Varnum.

And to this day no one knows the circumstances except the parties most interested.

As the Deacon and his wife jogged on toward home, he said with a smile, "Queer kind of an angel we entertained, wasn't it, mother?"
